Diamond Schmitt's design of the Buddy Holly Hall of Performing Arts and Sciences is featured in Architonic. Lubbock, the birthplace of the hall's namesake, is now home to West Texas' largest dedicated performance venue—bringing under one roof the city's vibrant performing arts community including the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra and Ballet Lubbock, and the Lubbock Independent School District along with a variety of professional touring music and theater productions. The Buddy Holly Hall anchors Lubbock's arts and culture district and features the grand 2,297-seat Helen DeVitt Jones Theater, the more intimate 415-person Crickets Theater, and other flexible spaces for rehearsal, events and performance, as well as a restaurant, two multi-purpose rooms and an outdoor tiered and covered amphitheater.
